The Clemson University Ring Tradition

At one time in Clemson's history, the Clemson University ring, as student and alumni know it today, did not exist. Although the Clemson ring tradition dates back to the late 1890's, the first 50 years of the ring tradition saw over 50 different Clemson ring styles, with each graduation class designing their own ring.

In 1940, a group of senior architecture students realized the value to a standard Clemson ring design that could be recognized by graduates and supporters all over the world. They received permission to submit a design for an official Clemson ring.

The design was unanimously accepted by both student and alumni. In July of the same year, the board of trustees passed a resolution recommending the ring design be adopted as the official Clemson ring. In the years to follow, a second official Clemson ring style was adopted for the women graduates of Clemson.

The official Clemson University Ring Design is truly a unique tradition and one that cannot be duplicated. The design has been copyrighted, ensuring that only Clemson students and alumni have the privilege of wearing the tradition.
