THE FLUID CAMPUS, 1998-2013
It was easy for faculty members to recognize the extraordinary benefits of matching well-ordered study on campus with well-guided immersion into urban life. In 1987, Dean James F. Barker, FAIA, now Clemson's 14th president, established a second center for the study of architecture and urbanism in Charleston, this time for undergraduate students. The heart of the idea included, again, off-campus study that was neatly folded into the curriculum, and the program emerged as a model for teaching + learning. As this parallel educational experiment evolved, it became clear to the faculty that we might offer an even richer experience if we allowed students the chance to learn in vertical settings, encouraging undergraduate and graduate students to study in either Charleston or Genoa (and eventually in Barcelona), thus creating a curriculum that seamlessly mixes study in Lee Hall with off-campus study. This we call "the Fluid Campus."

We celebrate "The Villa at 40" for its original idea, for the strength of its potential and for the extent of its reach.

THE ORIGINAL IDEA, 1973

How might a school of architecture on a quiet, rural campus distinguish its new graduate program among the many programs across the country? While several national programs offered study-abroad options, Clemson sought to offer a highly unusual opportunity for professional study that would combine the best qualities of a residential college with an intensive course of study blending architecture + urbanism. Rather than offering a grand tour serving as an addition to a graduate course of study, Clemson sought to blend well-informed travel into a semester's course work, matching studio and field studies with history + theory of the Western tradition. This was Dean Harlan McClure's original idea, embraced by the faculty of the school and generously endowed by the Daniel-Mickel Foundation.

THE REFLECTIVE PRACTITIONER, 1973-1998

Building on Dean McClure's idea, the faculty of the school quickly understood the potential of the Charles E. Daniel Center for Building Research and Urban Study as a vibrant educational experience. The nature of the live/learn environment intensified the relationship between the professor-in-residence and the students in ways that would inform the environment for teaching + learning both overseas and back home. During the initial 25-year period, only graduate students were invited to participate. It is not surprising that, for most, the guided experience through selected great works of architecture and civic design had a profound influence on their final semesters of study and into their careers. Living and studying in another culture offered the sort of global perspective that informs a more reflective, practice-oriented approach toward local action.

"I first arrived at the Villa late in the afternoon when no one was around to greet me.

So, I scaled the wall and camped in the Villa garden overnight. Early the next morning, I was greeted by the professor and his wife, who heard the sound of my soccer ball as I bounced it against the sunroom shutters. Little did I know that the semester would prove to be such an important time in my life. At the end of the term, the professor organized an informal, individual commencement ceremony so that I was able to graduate from Clemson in the garden surrounded by my newly formed, lifelong friends.

"I learned that I could, indeed, be self-reliant. I gained confidence in my ability to make my way in the world with a great degree of certainty and a clear point of view. Studying in the Villa, traveling in Italy and working with students in a variety of disciplines helped me start my career with an appreciation of the challenges faced by others. This understanding made me a stronger team player and a huge proponent of the team approach to 'well building.' The Genoa experience stayed with me through every day of my working life and throughout each stage of my career. It is with great pleasure that I look forward to being back in the Villa garden for the celebration of the Villa at 40!"
