Scope and Content

This series contains approximately 883 reels of films that were held by the film library of the Clemson University Communications Center. Included in the series are film prints, negatives, outtakes, video tracks and audio tracks both magnetic and optical. Although much of the film was intended for broadcast television, some are film prints. Most films were produced by the Communications Center and relate to Clemson University; the rest were obtained through the Educational Film Service or purchased.

The original order of the films has been lost; however, the following classification may help the user to locate films on specific subjects:

Administrative History

- 1967-1981, University Communications Center created, Harry Durham, Director
- 1980 (June), Electronic and Photographic Services created, James Burns, Director, and administered by the Office of University Relations
- 1984, Frank A. Nix, Acting Director
- 1985, Roger Koonce, Director
- 2001, Albert C. Littlejohn, Director
- 2005 (August), renamed Video Production Services

Before the creation of the University Communications Center in 1967, news related functions and activities were carried out by Auxiliary Enterprises and the University News Bureau. In 1967, the Communications Center was created to serve increasing internal needs of the University and to inform the public of University programs and activities. The Communications Center also produced materials for classroom use; these included photographs, films, and audio recordings. More than fifty weekly radio features were broadcast by twenty-five stations throughout the state. In the 1980s, the Communications Center expanded the services it provided: audio and video for television and radio, cinematography, multi-media presentations, photographic services, graphic design, video-teleconferencing, and equipment loans. In 1991 a statewide system of satellite receiving sites were installed and satellite programming, known as AgSat, was offered. The advent of digital technology witnessed a revolution in photography and video production processes which, by the late 1990s, necessitated a total reorganization and restructuring of the Communications Center.

Detailed Description

Accession numbers are shown in column one. The first two digits of the accession number indicate the year in which the film was acquired, the last two digits indicate an assigned sequential number.

Control numbers, found in column two, are similar to accession numbers: the first two digits indicate the box number in which the film is found, and the last two digits indicate the unique identification number found on each film.

Titles of films, found in column three, are indicated in italics. If films had no titles or production credits, subjects were assigned by the Communications Center. These subjects have been retained.

Column five lists running times stated in minutes and seconds. Running times have not been assigned for audio tracks.

Column six, Notes, provides information about the format of the film. The following abbreviations are used:

- a=audio track only, no video
- b=black and white
- c=color
- o=outtakes=scenes not included in the final film print
- OS=oversize film
- p=print, or, finished film
- psa=public service announcement
- s=silent,
- t=tracks=audio and video are on separate reels
- v=video=video track only, no audio
- wp=workprint, not a final version of the film
