Kate Schwennsen, FAIA, Professor, is the Chair of the School of Architecture, Clemson University. She is a recognized leader in bridging architectural education and practice, to changing the “who, what and how” of 21st century practice, directed at advancing the professional practice of architecture. Specifically, she has focused on making the “who” more inclusive and diverse, the “what” more sustainable and concerned with the public good, and the “how” more collaborative and knowledge-based.

Her teaching, scholarship and advocacy focus on issues of diversity, leadership and evolving education and practice models in architecture. Recent publications and presentations include: “You Can’t Just Add Women and Stir”, “Sustainable Education Sustainable Profession”, and “The Architect at Mid- (21st) Century”. Kate has held many leadership positions in professional organizations, and is currently a Co-Vice-President for Region III, (the Americas), on the Education Commission of the International Union of Architects (UIA). Schwennsen was 2006 President of the American Institute of Architects, the second woman to serve as the elected leader of this then-149-year-old, 80,000-member organization. Professor Schwennsen was formerly Professor of Architecture and Associate Dean (2001-2010) for Academic Programs of the College of Design, Iowa State University. Her contributions to the profession of architecture have been recognized with a number of honors and awards.
