COMPENSATION PRINCIPLES

The president, the chief human resources officer and the Executive Leadership Team have ultimate accountability for the outcomes of the compensation policy and strategy. In executing the compensation policy and strategy of the university, the chief human resources officer is charged with implementing guidance, procedures and practices as adopted and developed by the president and the Executive Leadership Team. The chief human resources officer is also charged with utilizing appropriate tools and industry standards to establish compensation practices consistent with the university's compensation strategy and policy. This includes, but is not limited to, the development and maintenance of competitive market-pay data and salary analyses.

Board of Trustees Compensation Committee

The mission of the Board of Trustees Compensation Committee is to ensure that Clemson University’s compensation policy is market-level competitive, supports achievement of top-20 status, maintains R1 Carnegie classification, and continues excellence in the University’s athletic programs. Such policy must apply to all employees of the University. The Board of Trustees has delegated administrative authority to Clemson University’s President, Chief Human Resources Officer and Executive Leadership Team to implement the policy. Further, the Board of Trustees expects Clemson University's compensation policy and implementation procedures to be consistent, driven by budgetary constraints and good fiscal stewardship, tied directly to employee performance that is linked to objective standards, and targeted at competitive market levels for similar jobs in local, state, regional or national markets as appropriate.

The Compensation Committee reviews and approves the Compensation Policy, and Compensation Guidelines annually. The Compensation Committee reviews the Compensation Committee Charter and makes recommendations for any needed revisions to the Board of Trustees. The Compensation Committee is responsible for ensuring compliance and consistent application of the compensation policy and reviewing and approving exceptions when appropriate. See the Compensation Committee Charter.

Compensation Market Strategy

The university recognizes that the market which determines the competitiveness of Clemson’s compensation structure is constantly moving. To maintain its competitive compensation position, the Office of Human Resources (OHR) will annually participate in and utilize industry specific surveys to determine market shifts and compensation trends in order to update both faculty and staff salary structures. With updated salary structures, OHR will work in coordination with the university’s chief financial officer and the university’s budget office to develop compensation budget recommendations to be presented to the university’s Board of Trustees for inclusion in the university’s annual budget.
Pay for Performance

All compensation actions shall be determined on the following factors:

- Achievement of university goals
- Achievement of college/division and departmental goals
- Achievement of individual performance goals

Recommendations and Approvals for Granting Compensation Actions

All compensation actions must be recommended by an individual's direct supervisor and approved by the person to whom the supervisor reports and the budget center leader. Some compensation actions require additional approval(s), as outlined in the Compensation Guidelines. With few exceptions, for example state-mandated cost-of-living increases, compensation actions must occur during the annual pre-approved period assigned to the specific budget center.

The chief human resources officer and the president, in consultation with the Executive Leadership Team, are accountable for approving exceptions to policy, practice, or the Compensation Guidelines and also for soliciting approval from the Board of Trustees Compensation Committee when required. Required approvals must be documented in writing and may not be delegated.
